Finish Well

By Michael Orr

No measure holds the length of suns,
These dreams of life contain,
No painter's brush can speak and say,
These strokes alone remain.

The end when all the credits roll,
Will play without a tell,
While here we stand on shaky earth,
And hope to finish well.

The potter knows the shape and size,
Of every mold and make,
But while we're made of stronger stuff,
Someday each pot will break.

But while we pour into this life,
As others buy and sell,
Remember now from where we came,
And strive to finish well.

The wheels are groaning as they turn,
The tread is wearing thin,
While weary heads and wounded hearts,
Remember where they've been.

Yet every day we plot our path,
And draw from every fail,
To keep our eyes upon the road,
And learn to finish well.

Now take this cup and drink from it,
No pining for another,
Do all to reach the best of you,
In how you treat your brother.

For all the pieces hold their worth,
When placed beyond the veil,
Into the shaping of a choice,
To go and finish well.

Church family

We have been so overwhelmed (in the best way) by how many of you have loved Jillian and Chandler and cheered them on through this season. It truly means more than you know.

The kids have decided to keep their wedding small and intimate. Invitations have now been sent, and we completely understand that many people we love dearly will not be in the room that day. While our hearts would happily gather everyone under one roof, we want to honor their wishes and give them the kind of celebration they've dreamed of.

Please know that if you did not receive an invitation, it was simply due to the limited size of the wedding and not a reflection of how much you mean to us. You are still very much part of their story and so loved by our family.

Several of you have asked how you can bless them as they begin this new chapter, they are registered at Amazon, Target, and would welcome Home Depot cards to go towards a washer and dryer.

Thank you for your prayers, encouragement, and for loving these two so well as they step into marriage. We are incredibly grateful for this community and love you all dearly.
